Hamillton County Reporter

The responsibility of the press...

In 1988, by Editor Jim Neal

In 1988 the Noblesville Ledger published a special edition on the 100th anniversary of the Hamilton County daily newspaper.

In that special sectional, editor Jim Neal wrote on the "responsibility of the press."

The Hamilton County Reporter, in its short history as being a part of the newspaper world, has attempted to follow Neal's advice. We believe the "responsibility" Neal wrote about is ever-much as present today than it was in 1988.

As we publish a July 4th edition today, we believe now is a good time to repeat Neal's word to the newspaper industry we serve. Because of the length of the article, half of Neal's article is being printed today and the other half will be published on Saturday.

When the Noblesville Ledger became a daily newspaper 100 years ago (1888), it contained little local news and mostly political rhetoric which was biased and opinionated and often inflammatory.

When the Noblesville Daily Ledger merged with another Noblesville newspaper named The Enterprise 75 years ago, the front page news story announced that the merger was taking place "to better serve the Republican Party."

On that day in 1914, the newspaper's columns contained more local news than its predecessors but rarely did it contain more than one side of a political issue.

This was not unique to Noblesville's newspaper. This was the way journalism was in the early years.

Although the small town press never exhibited the sensationalism of big city newspapers, responsible news coverage as implied in the first Amendment to the United States Constitution did not materialize until this century. Freedom of the press existed, but an objective and responsibility press began to develop only within the past 50 years.

"The Ledger's first obligation is to report the news, but it also has a secondary agenda to provide a marketplace where the issues can be fully discussed."...Jim Neal.

The revolutionary idea of freedom of the press was taken literally by newspapers who used the First Amendment as a license to publish whatever they wanted – true, half true

Today freedom of the press is highly controversial, although disseminators of news have become more and more responsible and have sought to tell the story fully and the radio and within the last 40 years, television, the media tracts of farm land. Investigation over several months have added new dimensions to news coverage. In addition to straight reporting, the media provides an investigative role to its coverage, including an analysis of the news designed to help the reader understand what he has read.

But today's adversarial journalism – which is attracting attention during the 1988 presidential campaign – is not new. It is like the Noblesville Ledger of 75 years ago before journalists moved their opinions and bias to the editorial pages. For the past 40 years at least a responsible press has drawn a careful line between news reporting and editorial and TV have developed personalities who have become newsmakers as well as news reporters. These commentators and anchor personnel guide and influence what they report, hence their adversarial role.

Regardless, the media, both print and electronic, continue to provide the news essential to retention and development of a free society.

The media, both print and electronic, provide the educational tools - the daily history book - to guarantee that society is aware of the never-ending and complex events as they take place.

To put these in perspective of journalism close to the people, there are a number of excellent examples which occurred within the scope of the Noblesville Daily Ledger, all within the last 50 years.

For years the Ledger routinely provided readers with a list of Hamilton County real estate transactions, showing who were buying and selling property such as farms, non-farm land, residential and commercial homes and buildings and other properties.

During a period in the early 1950s, it became evident It is true that with the advent of electronic news, first that an out-of-state buyer (Chicago) was purchasing wide disclosed that the Indianapolis Water Company, a public utility, had employed a private firm to buy this land without explanation to create what eventually became Morse Reservoir, northwest of Noblesville.

Needless to say, the price of the land soared after the disclosure of purchasing which was initially denied by water company officials.

The company contended that it did nothing improper because it did not exercise the right to eminent domain in obtaining the land.

The question is did the newspaper act in the public The electronic media's role has changed as well. Radio interest in disclosing the secret negotiations were taking place on land surrounding Morse Lake? Did it play a proper role in covering planning and zoning so people could be adequately informed and able to make a correct judgement on the future? Should it continue to print all the news, all the time – both good and bad?

The story of The Star Spangled Banner

As we celebrate the United States' birthday today - our country turns 238 years old - it turns out this year marks a major anniversary for America's national anthem, The Star-Spangled Ban-

The song began as a poem, written by Francis Scott Key in September of 1814. The U.S and Great Britain were engaged in the War of 1812, and Key was at Fort McHenry in Baltimore, which turned out to be a major American stand in the war.

Key observed a large American flag at Fort McHenry; the U.S. troops raised it every morning at reveille. He began writing his poem, which totaled four stanzas, and published it as "Defence of Fort McHenry." It was soon set to the tune of "To Anacreon in Heaven" (ironically, an old drinking song that first became popular in Britain).

The Star Spangled Banner continued to gain popularity throughout the 19th century, and was commissioned for official use by the U.S. Navy in 1889. In 1931, President Herbert Hoover signed a Congressional Resolution that made the song the Unit-States' official national anthem.

Clang clang went the trolley

By MARY SUE ROWLAND

The year was 1903, when things changed in Noblesville for the better. That was the date of the first interurban cars that brought passengers to and from Noblesville. The interurban was a connector to rural Hamilton County and further north even as far as Ft. Wayne. Noblesville folks could ride to Indianapolis and other cities and towns on any given day. In an old advertisement around the turn of the century, riders were assured that they were safe to ride the interurban and could ride round trip for just a little over a penny per mile. However, history documented serious accidents through the years. From 1903 to 1941, the interurban ran down the middle of the street in Noblesville with stops to see the gas flames during the natural gas boom, or shopping or taking a trip to another town. In the heyday of the interurban around 1910, Noblesville welcomed 35 trains a day making it "one of the banner stations on the Good planning resulted in the Terminal in Indianapolis accommodating travelers who had business at the State Capital and Monument Circle, all within walking distance of the Terminal. For 70 years the Indianapolis Traction Terminal included a nine-story office building with a modern tract train shed. This was called, "The Cross Roads of America" taking people as far as Louisville, Dayton and north to Ft. Wayne. More than 500 daily trains and 7 million people per year made their way to Indianapolis giving the city a major economic boom.

The Indianapolis newspapers arrived in small towns all around the state each morning on the trains and folks could go for the day to Indianapolis to see a show, shop, have a meal and return by evening. But as automobiles took over and people wanted to go when and where on a moment's notice everything changed.

Just as progress would have it, the Indianapolis Traction Terminal building stood until 1972, when it was torn down. Later the bus station took its place, a sign of the times. The Noblesville Station and many other stations around the state survived to serve in various ways for downtown communities. Today there are many ideas to Just one of a million stories. bring back the interurban as a local trolley.

Heritage Tourism Initiative" completed by Ball State University in hopes to lend vision to Noblesville recommends, "a historic street car or trolley line for Noblesville". Resurrecting an historic streetcar line that take travelers around Noblesville's historic square and historic neighborhoods could be a unique regional experience and draw for "cultural heritage tourists". The investment could have long term and far reaching returns according to the report. A community that has integrated a "heritage-type system using renovated Art Deco-era rolling stock" is Kenosha, Wisconsin. They run the trains year round even in winter. The line in Kenosha is a 2 mile loop that intersects the historic district. Using mostly Federal Funding, Kenosha's trolley project, including a storage barn, cost $5 million dollars. They consider it money well spent as it draws tourists who spend dollars in their community not to mention the fun for the locals. Heaven knows there are ample cars at the Indiana Transportation Museum right here in Noblesville.

New ideas with a much higher price tag are being considered for a commuter rail line between Noblesville and the city. The good news is the rail line was saved and could have a new use for the corridor for the future. It could look a lot like the interurban of the 1900's. Running hundreds of passengers between important cities in an efficient way.

A story that is told about the old Traction Station in Noblesville is that Hugh McGowan, president of the Union Traction Company, picture hung in the Terminal in Indianapolis until 1972. The building was torn down and Dr. Howard Blackburn of the Indiana Transportation Museum and Noblesville was able to acquire the very large painting of Mr. McGowan. He stored it gently in a closet. Waiting to find a home for the picture, was the original Noblesville Interurban Station. David Heighway had something to do with bringing Mr. McGowan home to the station located at 9th and Clinton Streets. Mr. McGowan is displayed in a manner becoming such a visionary. He hangs in the conference room of the original Interurban Station and is usually a topic of conversation. His serious facial expression reflects the hard times and shows his success of helping to build Indiana.

As the story goes, Roy Henderson agent for the Interurban Station in Noblesville around 1910 or so, ran off with all of the ticket receipts and another man's wife. No word on the name of his companion.

From honey and shea shower gel to cilantro soap, everything he produces is made by hand using all natural ingredients, and 90 percent of his raw materials come from local sources in Indiana.

The first class is Soap: My Boo Boo's Paw Print Soap, July 16, 1-2 p.m. (class fee $12). Happy Sun: Roll-On Perfume happens July 30 (class fee $9). Guests are asked to register by calling (317) 452-3690.

Poetry in Motion, July 21-25, 9:30 a.m.-12:30 p.m.

Aspiring and active poets are invited to play with poems and the artistry of poetry writing during Poetry in Motion. This "playshop" will focus on creating movement in writing, "speaking" in authentic voices and tapping into sensory image. Poet Jo Taylor of Raleigh, N.C., will lead this event. The cost is $115, which includes beverages, morning pastry and fruit. For Jack comes to photography on the other more information, the public may call Taylor at (919) 414-7358 or email her at jotaylor.greason@bellsouth.net.
