Will gun violence spread to Hamilton County?

By FRED SWIFT
Gun violence is obviously becoming a terrible problem in neighboring Indianapolis. Will it spread to Hamilton County? And what can we do to avoid such things from coming here? You can bet law enforcement officials and elected leadership have thought about it and are doing all they can to prevent it.

In Indy and most major cities the worst of the gun violence is found in the inner-city minority communities. Since we have virtually no such neighborhoods in this county, we can assume this so far accounts for the absence of the almost daily shootings we hear about to our south.

But, let's not be too smug because drugs are ultimately responsible for most of the shootings and armed robberies. And, the sale and use of drugs is not limited to the inner city. So, keeping ahead of the distribution of hard drugs can be a key to a safer community.

Unfortunately, authorities have noted an increase in the use of heroin locally even within the affluent suburban population. It was even called an epidemic by Drug Task Force members at a recent conference that drew U.S. Congresswoman Susan Brooks to Noblesville to learn about the local situation.

Not only are there grave health risks involved in hard drug use, but the danger of dealing with drug peddlers can be deadly. Through the years there have been cases of local young people buying drugs, then finding the sellers revisiting their customers to rob or even kill.

So, assuming drugs are a principal cause of the violence, what can we do to prevent it in Hamilton County? Obviously, the arrest and conviction of dealers is high on the list. But, before that we have a weapon that has probably already kept a lot of trouble at bay.

The police forces in this county have a reputation for being visible, vigilant and tough on potential troublemakers. This reputation has been pretty widely established not only within the county, but in surrounding areas. Word gets around.

Then, do programs such as those offered by the Hamilton County Council on Alcohol and Drugs help? It's hard to prove, but obviously it doesn't hurt to make teenagers aware of what problems these substances can cause.

Average citizens can also help. When suspected illegal activity is noticed, a tip to police can be helpful and won't get the tipster in trouble even if the report turns out to be a false alarm.

One thing is certain: We had best do all we can to stem the invasion of heroin and other drug sales now or risk the violence that follows close behind.

Fire destroys historic Sheridan building

By BRIAN REDDICK
At 6:09 p.m. Saturday evening, Sheridan Fire responded to 400 S. Main St. in downtown Sheridan. Two Sheridan police officers were the first to arrive and made entry into the building to search for anyone who might still be inside. After attempting to search the building for occupants the officers found themselves trapped and being overcome by smoke on the second floor. Sheridan firefighters were quickly able to rescue the two officers. Both officers were treated and released on site for smoke inhalation but were not injured according to Capt. Travis Stern of the Sheridan Fire Department. A short time after the officers were rescued a large portion of the building collapsed onto 4th Street.

The two-alarm blaze quickly overcame water resources of the town. Seven tanker trucks shuttled water from hydrants from nearby Westfield. Firefighters from Westfield, Noblesville, Jackson Fire Territory, Cicero, Kirklin, Zionsville and Kempton assisted in the massive fire.

The three-story building, which was over 100 years old, was occupied by Main Street PowerMAIL and owned by Kyle Malott according to Sheridan town councilwoman Brenda Bush. Councilwoman Bush said, "This is a sad day in Sheridan history."

No one was in the building at the time of the fire and the fire is currently under investigation. The building is expected to be a total loss.

A historic Sheridan building was destroyed by a fire that broke out Saturday evening. Seven additional fire departments assisted Sheridan Fire in trying to put out the blaze.

Love my circus...love my monkeys!

By JANET HART LEONARD
She's my monkey She's part of my circus. Her name is Leah.

She is 23 pounds of sugar and spice, a bit naughty and a whole lot of nice. She has big sparkling eyes that melt your heart and when she doesn't get her way, her lips have the sweetest pout.
At 19 months she has proven to be part Houdini and part monkey. We should have known that we were all in for an adventure when, just after learning to walk, Emily found her on the kitchen counter. She had pulled out the drawers in the kitchen cabinet and climbed up. She wanted a banana. Like I said, she is our monkey.

Recently she learned to climb out of her crib. Emily said they watched her on the baby monitor. She sat for quite a while in her rocking chair, just a rocking the night away. She then ventured to her 3 year old brother's room. Aiden told her "Sissy, you need to be in bed." She said "no" and off she went to try another bed...her mom and dad's.
Emily took her back upstairs and laid on the floor and watched her fight sleep for another hour. I'd feel more sympathy for Emily if I hadn't lived the same scenario 32 years ago with her.
Emily and Drew decided to put up a gate that was labeled "impossible to climb". Obviously they were wrong. Emily turned over in bed and there staring at her...Wonder Baby. She may not be able to leap tall buildings with a single bound but she sure can get wherever she wants to go. She is one determined and strong willed child. Proof that those traits are passed down from generation to generation. Like mother like daughter. Ok, and maybe Grandmother.

Whenever you tell Leah "I love you" she says..."To the moon and back". How do you say no to a sweet little monkey like her? GrandChuck and I will soon find out. Drew and Emily are going away for a few days and thought that we would enjoy keeping the grandmunchkins.
It will be an interesting three days and an even more interesting three nights. I have a feeling Leah will give us something to talk about, and me, something to write about.
As you all know...I do love my circus and especially my monkeys aka grandmunchkins!

How does your garden grow?

By MARY SUE ROWLAND

As long as something is growing in your garden that is useful such as vegetables or flowers, you have an "official" garden. Weeds do not count as a garden. There are community gardens, pocket gardens, small gardens and large gardens but have you heard of the Guerrilla Garden? There is a secret Guerrilla Garden in Noblesville tucked on the river bank between power poles and lines. The space was small and overgrown with weeds and vines when a new resident took upon himself to turn it into a garden. The garden is just at the bend in the road and cannot be missed. Most mornings you can find Dan tending his garden for all to enjoy. One morning he found that local artists had placed metal sculptures in his garden. He was very pleased and surprised.

Start to notice the difference between weeds and vines verses tended gardens especially on public property. You see, Dan does not own the ground where his garden grows but it belongs to someone else. Dan did not ask for permission because that is what Guerilla Gardening is all about. It is a protest to neglected public places. The land used by some Guerrilla Gardeners is done as a secret act in an effort to make the area of use and more attractive. The first garden was placed in 1973 in the Bowery Houston area of New York. A private lot was turned into a garden which still stands today and is now part of the Parks department. Guerrilla gardening takes place in many parts of the world, more than thirty countries are documented. There is even a web site, GuerrillaGardening.org.

Another example is the International Sunflower Guerrilla Gardening Day scheduled on the 1st of May of every year, in an annual international event when guerrilla gardeners plant sunflowers in their neighborhoods, typically in public places perceived to be neglected. Such areas as tree pits, flower beds and roadsides are selected for the act. In 2010, more than 5000 people signed up to participate in North America, Europe and Asia. But back to Noblesville. Only a few steps from the secret garden is the river walk with weeds and vines and unplanted gardens waiting to be noticed by someone. When a resident asked a city employee why mulch and flowers had not been planted, the answer was there is no money. The city spent it all on salt for last winter's snow. Can that be true or does no one care?

People have started the Guerrilla Gardening movement all over the world. Los Angeles founded its gardens in 2010. The group converts vintage gumball machines into seed dispensers. These seed balls, a combination of clay, compost and regional specific seeds can be planted in any area that will benefit from wild flowers. Now that is a novel idea. In Northern Utah, apple trees commonly grow along the banks of canals. Asparagus grows along the smaller ditch of the banks. Many of these plants were seeded 150 years ago by the workers who dug the canals, by burying their lunch apple core in the newly dug soil.

Guerrilla gardening continues today, as individuals secretly plant fruit trees, edible perennials and flowers in parks, along bike trails and pretty much where ever a small plot of soil can be found. The message is, things that grow, bloom or can be eaten add value to land and life. Find the secret Guerrilla Garden that has added to a street and a neighborhood by someone new to Noblesville and someone who cares more than most. Maybe we should take a lesson from Dan and his garden.

If you find the Guerrilla garden or know of another Guerrilla garden contact the Hamilton Reporter and let us know. If you feel so inclined, plant something even if it is not your land. Folks are doing it all over the world. Join the movement.

Gantt unloads in Game 2

By DON JELLISON
Reporter Editor

Minutes away from warming up to pitch the second game of the North-South Baseball Classic Saturday at Richmond, Noblesville's Garrett Christman paused to give thoughts about his final game representing his high school.

He said it was like icing on the cake, after leading the Millers a couple of weeks ago to the Class 4A state championship.

"This will be my last chance to represent Noblesville," said Christman, who soon will be off to a collegiate career at Butler University.

"It's my last game playing for Coach (Justin) Keever."

Christman hasn't slacked off on his baseball since the huge state championship victory over Terre Haute North at Victory Field. Since that time he has been playing for the Midland semifinal team in Ohio.

"They're using me at shortstop and second base, and pitching a little," Christman said. "I've kept busy. Playing has kept me in baseball shape. I took a couple of days off following the high school season and then got back to playing and getting ready for the college season."

Christman said he looked at other colleges, but that Butler was the clear choice decision.

"Coach (Steve) Farley basically told me that I would play immediately as a freshman," Christman said. "That was one of the big reasons I picked Butler."

Christman said his goal is to some day play professional baseball. He was selected in the recent Major League Draft by the San Francisco Giants, but opted out to enroll at Butler.

"That's want I want to do, play professional baseball," he said. "But right now I want to go to Butler and get bigger and stronger."

As a senior at NHS Christman hit .345 and on the mound was 8-1 with a 2.03 ERA and 80 strikeouts in 76 innings.

Playing in the Saturday double-header for Keever's North Team yesterday, Christman didn't have his best of days.

In the opener, used as a designated hitter, he twice hit the ball hard, but right to the right fielder and then to the left fielder.

He started the second game on the mound and allowed three runs on three hits and his team made a key error in the first inning.

One of the big blows struck against Christman was a run-scoring triple by Hamilton Southeastern's Tre Gantt, who later scored the South's second run on another South hit.

Christman settled down in the second. He allowed one hit, but nothing else. In the two innings he fanned two batters.

Gantt's, Hamilton County's Player of the Year as a junior, appears completely healthy from an injury which slowed him much of his senior year. He also smashed a double in that second game; scored two runs and had the one RBI.

Gantt, like Christman at Butler, hopes to see action as a college freshman. He's headed for Ohio State.

Noblesville's Garrett Christman pitched two innings in the second game of Saturday's doubleheader at the Indiana North-South Baesball Classic Saturday at Richmond. Christman will start attending Butler University this fall, where he will play for the Bulldogs.

"There is no guarantee, but I think if I work hard I will see playing time as a freshman," he said. "I'm completely healthy after the injury."

The South twice defeated the North in the Saturday double-header. They scored three runs in the seventh and three more in the eighth to win the opener 7-3. In the nightcap, the South opened up a 6-0 lead through the top of the fifth. The North rallied with four runs in the seventh, but the South got the winning runs by scoring twice in the eighth.

Gantt went 0-for-2 in the opening win. In that game, Fishers' Nathaniel Rhodes pitched two innings for the South. He walked a batter and fanned a batter in the first. He recorded another strikeout in the second, but also gave up a single and a double and one run.

Westfield's Luke Dietz relieved Christman for the North in the second game. He went two innings, allowed two hits and one run while striking out one batter.

The South, with the 2-0 lead, will try to sweep the series when today the two clubs meet again in the final game.

Noblesville High School head football Coach Lance Scheib addresses players at Football University, an intensive football camp that is taking place this weekend at Hare Chevrolet Field.

Football University offers...

An intensive weekend of learning

By RICHIE HALL
Reporter Sports Editor

Imagine learning more about football than you ever knew before - or even realized you did - from people who have played and/or coached in the National Football League.

Welcome to Football University. Noblesville High School's Hare Chevrolet Field is hosting a FBU camp this weekend for the sixth year. Noblesville is one of 42 camps that Football University hosts during the year, and over 200 middle and high school players are participating.

The attraction of FBU is not just the famous names, although having their experience is a big help. The players that are splitting time between the field and the classroom at Noblesville received invitations to attend the camp, and many of them have the drive and desire to get better.

And they will learn, that's for sure.

"That's what we really pride ourselves in is, a guy coming here, learning from a coach that played, or coached in the NFL, and just going 'You know what? Here's how he taught his guys to do something,'" said Chad Carpenter, FBU's head coach. Carpenter is a former NFL wide receiver, playing three seasons with the Arizona Cardinals and another with the Cleveland Browns.

Carpenter was supervising activity at Hare Chevrolet Field on a drizzly Saturday afternoon. The schedule was moved up on Saturday in case of rain, but things stayed on schedule.

"We anticipate getting a full 18, 20 hours of football in the whole time we're here," said Carpenter.

Noblesville head football coach Lance Scheib serves as the regional director for his city's FBU camp. He spoke about how important it was for the young football players to receive coaching - and encouragement - from those that made it to the highest level.

"These guys have all been there," said Scheib. "The neat thing is they were all high school players, they were all middle school players, and then they were able to somehow find a way to make it to the very highest level, and I think they can connect with a lot of our campers, and show them the path it could take to get them to the ultimate goal.

"But more than anything else, the experiences they share with the athletes about off the field, about being good students, about being good people. I think that's a message that we can't hit home enough with our young adults."

And the drive is there. Many of the testimonials on the Football University Web site are from parents who noticed the real improvement in their sons after a week-end of such intensive training. The coaches notice it, too. Jeff Rutledge, a quarterbacks coach who was a national champion at the University of Alabama and a two-time Super Bowl winner, has been participating in these camps for four years.

"When we meet with them on Sunday afternoons, I can honestly tell they've improved from Friday night," said Rutledge. "It's little things, but you take one little thing and improve on that, and another little thing, and then all of a sudden you take care of a lot of little things, and you're a good football player."

Instructor and former pro cornerback Kwami Lassiter, who played for the Arizona Cardinals, St. Louis Rams and San Diego Chargers, runs a defensive drill.

"I talked to a lot of dads that say 'You know what, my son went to FBU and he really had to compete, and then when he went back to his high school, in 7-on-7, he was 10 steps ahead of everybody else and it was easier because it just wasn't that high-paced, high intensity,'" said Carpenter. "That's exactly what we want. We want our guys to come here and get better so they go back to their high school and they can show all the work that they got here and how much harder they're trying to get after their craft, which is to become a better football player."

Carpenter said the FBU experience emulates an NFL mini-camp, and it is as structured and regimented as one would expect. Players attend six practice sessions and five classroom sessions, in addition to other programs and presentations throughout the weekend. Parents are strongly encouraged to participate as well, and many could be seen on the sidelines taking videos of their sons.

Scheib also commented on the economic impact hosting an event has on Noblesville.

"I think it's great for our community, because these people are staying in our hotels, and they're coming to our restaurants," said Scheib. "So from an economic standpoint, it's fantastic. I just feel like at anytime you can bring people to showcase Noblesville, our city itself, I think is just something that I think adds great value to our camp."

Football University wraps up today with one more classroom session, two more practices, and a football awareness presentation along with player evaluations.

4-H Fair Dog Agility...

10-year members leave lasting impression

By RICHIE HALL
Reporter Sports Editor
The Hamilton County 4-H Fair officially starts on Thursday, but the dogs had their day on Saturday. The Dog Agility show took place at the 4-H Llama Barn, and the usual assortment of talented canines and patient owners entertained the crowd. It's not a stretch to say usual, as the dog projects had four 10-year members and one nine-year member. The 10-year members are Rachel Hartman of the Westfield City Slickers. She trained "Comet," her Yellow Labrador, with whom she will compete at the Indiana State Fair for the second time this year. Jana Cooley guided her Sheltie, "Lily," through the course again this year. Josh Clark, one of the Mud-sockers, competed in the Excellence category with his Cardigan/Welsh Corgi "Drover," and Stephanie Foerder trained "Max," her Golden Retriever. Foerder is very familiar with the Llama Barn, as she is a member of both Carmel Colleens and Gents and the Llama Trekkers. She was one of three 4-Hers who received llama scholarships at Friday night's 4-H Fair Queen Pageant. Foerder has been showing dogs for nine years.

It was an interesting road for Foerder and Max. She was already in a higher-level class when she began training Max, so that meant she had to stay in that level. That meant Max had to learn the basic training and the advanced training in one year. "So it's just been so rewarding to see him move throughout the different levels of obedience and showmanship and agility with me these last few years," said Foerder. In dog agility, there are four levels: Beginner, Intermediate, Advanced and Excellence. Dogs negotiate through an obstacle course, which gets more complex as they go through each level. This is the first of three parts for the dog contest; the next part is Obedience, which takes place on Monday. "I showed in advanced this year, but I was fortunate enough to watch the expert group go through, and I think it's so cool to see all the things that they have accomplished throughout their 10 years, as well as I have too," said Foerder. "You really do see a difference when you first start training them." Foerder noted that, for example, a dog may not jump over a jumping obstacle, or even do something simple, like go through a tunnel. It can take a dog an entire year, she said, to learn one obstacle. "But once they get it, it's so fun to see them run through the course as fast as they can because they're just so excited at what they do," said Foerder. She just graduated from Guerin Catholic, and will attend Eastern Kentucky University to major in Animal Science. The nine-year member is Aly Morgan of the Jolly Rogers, who competed in the Advanced A division with "Dash," her Border Collie. Morgan won the state fair competition in 2010 in the Intermediate category, and then won Advanced A in 2013.

Canadian team swimming at the Enchanted Forest meet...

From Pickering to Noblesville

By RICHIE HALL
Reporter Sports Editor

The Noblesville Swim Club's Enchanted Forest Meet has gone international this year.

Ottenbrite-Muylaert

In addition to some of the best swim teams from Indiana, Illinois and Ohio, the Pickering Swim Club from Ontario is competing at the meet. Pickering is a suburb of Toronto, and is located just east of that city.

Pickering has given a little taste of Canada to the Forest Park Aquatic Center, decorating its tent with the famous Maple Leaf flag. In a nice gesture, NSC played the Canadian national anthem prior to starting the meet on Friday.

Anne Ottenbrite-Muylaert, Pickering's coach, said that her club was running into trouble finding meets this year. Toronto is scheduled to host the Pan Am Games next summer, and the area has seen many pool closings as it prepares for the games, which invites teams from North and South America. Indianapolis itself hosted the Pan Am Games in 1987.

"So in the process, we had a lot of meets canceled, especially with 50-meter pools," said Ottenbrite-Muylaert.

While Toronto is by no means a frozen tundra - average high temperatures in July are close to 80 degrees - obviously 10-lane outdoor pools such as the one at Forest Park are a luxury.

"So I was sort of searching high and low to try and find something for us and I came along this meet and I was excited because it did everything we needed," said Ottenbrite-Muylaert.

Besides the experience of getting to swim outdoors, the coach liked the fact that the meet had heats and finals, was a nice little trip, and wasn't too far away for parents to travel. Ottenbrine-Muylaert said it's about a nine-hour drive from Pickering to Noblesville.

"They camp and they cook out and they love it," said Ottenbrine-Muylaert. "It's a nice family trip for everyone."

The coach noted that Canada's swim season is usually over by this time, while meets in the United States continue into July. Indiana swimmers are preparing for next weekend's Senior State meet, with Age Group State to follow in two weeks. Ottenbrine-Muylaert said she likes to bring her team down for "finale meet," and this one fit the bill.

"We've had some best times and we've had some opportunities," said Ottenbrine-Muylaert. "I love them to get up and get some second swims in finals and experience head-to-head competition like that."

Ottenbrine-Muylaert noted that Noblesville was busy this weekend, which is true since the Street Dance was going on at the same time as Saturday's finals.

"It's busy, it's good," said the coach. "The kids are having a blast."
