The County Line

Three local politicians would make good governor candidates

By FRED SWIFT

There is increasing speculation in the national media that Gov. Mike Pence may be offered the GOP vice presidential nomination. If (and it's still a big if) that happens Pence will withdraw from the race for governor. The Republican State Committee would have to move quickly to find a viable candidate to head the ticket in November.

How about a candidate from Hamilton County? We have never had a governor elected from the county, yet the county has produced the largest Republican plurality of any county in recent years. A local candidate would likely increase that plurality which the GOP could certainly use.

Who then you might ask would be a logical choice? I have a few suggestions if anyone at the state level cares to hear them which I doubt.

How about State Sen. Luke Kenley of Noblesville? He expressed interest once before, but didn't get a campaign off the ground. No one knows state government any better than Luke. He serves as the very important and respected chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Luke's name recognition may not be universal, but he is known to important people in politics and the news media. And, of course, he is well known in Hamilton County. So, if he's qualified and known in the right places, why not seriously consider him?

Another choice might be our representative in Congress, Susan Brooks. In less than four years in Washington she has been recognized as a tough but congenial spokesman for the party.

Her experience in public affairs precedes her days in Congress. She was U.S. District Attorney, a real advantage when it comes to criminal justice issues. Indiana has never had a woman as governor, it might be about time. And she is a Hamilton County resident who has gotten favorable statewide media coverage.

Or how about this as a long shot, Mayor Jim Brainard? Not everyone agrees with everything he has done in Carmel, but everyone seems to admit he has "vision." Vision can be a very important, even vital asset for a governor.

Brainard has executive experience after 20 years heading Carmel. His name is certainly well known statewide, and few would doubt that he can be effective in getting things done. Might be worth considering what he could do for the state.

Kenley

Brooks

Brainard

Well, there are just three folks that "the powers that be" might want to consider. Any one of them could add a new dimension to the election and a legitimate opponent for the 'good ole boy' John Gregg that the Democrats are going to offer us. Of course, none of this matters if Donald Trump chooses to pick someone other than Pence, and there are people hoping both ways on that.

Home of the Millers: the old armory

By DON JELLISON
Reporter Editor

In keeping with the Bicentennial spirit flooding the state this summer, in Sunday's Hamilton County Reporter we are publishing an article on Noblesville Schools, written by Noblesville Daily Ledger Reporter Anne Auwaerter in the Sept. 29 100th anniversary of the paper.

Part of Anne's article has to do with Noblesville basketball and why and how Noblesville built its first high school gym. What the article didn't reveal is where the Millers played before they got a gym of their own.

It was the old Noblesville Armory, located on the river on Logan Street in downtown Noblesville.

The armory played a big part in my life. The Jellisons lived on Maple Street, just a couple of blocks away from the armory.

After school, I would go to the armory and watch the Millers practice.

Times when the Armory was closed or the Millers weren't practicing, I would sneak into a side door and do my own practicing (off the court) on the north side of the gym. A sign over a door was my "basket." I think armory officials knew I was there, but didn't kick me out.

Fishers' Nickel Plate District will be the site of the Arts Crawl on July 15. Art displays, street performances, and food and drinks will be offered at the free event.

Arts Crawl scheduled for July 15

Breathtaking art displays, engaging street performances and delicious food and drinks are coming to the Nickel Plate District once again. On July 15 from 6 to 9 p.m., the community is invited for the second installation of the Arts Crawl, a program the City hosts in partnership with the Nickel Plate District Business Council and the Fishers Arts Council. The free event features over 25 stops at local businesses that showcase local or regional artists and their exhibits.

"Now that we've created a vibrant downtown gathering place for our residents to enjoy, we're constantly working to activate it in diverse ways," stated Mayor Scott Fadness. "The Arts Crawl is such a unique event because it allows residents to visit the Nickel Plate District, connect with local businesses and enjoy some very diverse art exhibits."

Maps are available at City Hall, at participating businesses and on the City's website for those interested in planning their self-guided art tour ahead of time. Guests are also encouraged to download the Nickel Plate District mobile app to access a digital map during the event. The event is hosted in conjunction with the City's AMP After Dark Concert series presented by Frost Brown Todd Attorneys, that takes place from 9 to 11 p.m. and features local singer/songwriter, Jennie DeVoe.

"Hosting the Arts Crawl prior to the AMP After Dark means that the community has an entire evening of free events to enjoy," said Fishers Parks & Recreation Director, Tony Elliot. "We encourage residents to invite a few friends, arrive early and celebrate the talent we have right here in Fishers."

Additional information about the Arts Crawl including a list of participating businesses, artists and a downloadable map can be found at www.Fishers.in.us/ArtsCrawl. Guests attending the event are encouraged to share photos with hashtag #FishersArts for a chance to be featured.

“A stark reminder of the risks our public safety personnel take each day...”

Carmel Mayor, Police Chief issue statements on Dallas police ambush

Carmel Mayor Jim Brainard issued the following statement regarding the ambush of police officers in Dallas:

“It is always a tragedy when lives are lost, but it seems especially saddening when it is the result of hatred or intolerance toward others. The police officers shot in Dallas were there to protect the rights of the peaceful protesters. I join others in sending our thoughts and prayers to the families, co-workers and friends of the officers lost in the line of duty, to those of the injured officers and civilians and to the people of Dallas. I know that under the leadership of Mayor Mike Rawlings the city can heal as a community and find common ground on which to stand together to battle all forms of violence toward one another.”

Carmel Police Chief Tim Green issued the following statement:

“The deaths of the officers in Dallas are a stark reminder of the risks our public safety personnel take each day. Our hearts go out to the families who lost loved ones in this attack. It reminds us of the importance of continuing to be vigilant and well trained. As an accredited police department with a strong and supportive law enforcement community, it will be our goal to learn what we can from this senseless act and incorporate those lessons into our training. However, there are times when no amount of training can prevent all injuries or deaths when someone is determined to take the lives of others. The Carmel Police Department appreciates the outpouring of support that has been shown since this tragedy. In times like these, this type of support means a lot to all the officers and employees of the police department.”

The U.S. Conference of Mayors (USCM) President Oklahoma City Mayor Mick Cornett issued the following statement:

“Today is a sad day for Dallas, for all of America’s cities, and for the nation. Last night, five brave police officers were killed and seven more were wounded as they protected the constitutional rights of protestors to demonstrate, in this case against the actions of police officers in other cities. Two civilians were wounded as well. America’s mayors send their condolences and their prayers to the victims and their families, and to the entire Dallas community.

“Dallas Mayor Mike Rawlings and Police Chief David Brown have been a constant and a calming force since this tragedy occurred - keeping the public informed, reminding us of the risks our police officers face every day, and leading their community through a devastating time. As Mayor Rawlings said of the police this morning, “putting their lives on the line is no hyperbole.” America’s mayors recognize and respect the risks our police officers take every day and the bravery they exhibit.

“From all reports, the Dallas Police Department did everything right. There was no inappropriate show of force, the demonstration had been peaceful and was winding down, and there were positive interactions between the officers and the demonstrators. Police officers lost their lives at the hands of bad actors, and we’ll know more about what happened as the investigation unfolds.

“Last night’s demonstrations were a response to the tragic police shootings in Baton Rouge and Falcon Heights. Officials in both of those communities have moved quickly to ensure that these questionable shootings are independently and thoroughly investigated. At this difficult time for these two cities, our thoughts and prayers are also with Baton Rouge Mayor Kip Holden and Falcon Heights Mayor Peter Lindstrom and their communities, and, of course, with the families of the two men who were killed.”

Reports: Trump to hold Tuesday rally in Westfield

Donald Trump, the presumptive Republican nominee for president, is reportedly making another campaign stop in Hamilton County.

WTHR reported Friday evening that Trump will be conducting a rally at Grand Park in Westfield. Later on, Fox 59 reported that Rex Early, Trump’s Indiana campaign chairman, told the Indianapolis Star that the rally would begin around 7:30 p.m.

All this comes amid the speculation that Trump will choose Indiana Governor Mike Pence as his vice-presidential running mate. A decision must be made soon, as the Republican National Convention begins on July 18, while Pence must withdraw his name from the ballot for re-election as Governor by July 15 if he is indeed chosen as Trump’s running mate.

Same thing for games. Not only did the Millers play there, so did other county schools.....Carmel, Fishers, Walnut Grove, Westfield and Jackson Central, on occasions. Even the sectional was played there. I watched most of those games, again through my side door entry.

Sheridan didn’t play there. Larry Hobbs didn’t play anywhere except Hobbs Hall.

I have lots of memories of the armory, first as a kid on Maple Street and then as a sports reporter for The Ledger.

One of my most cherished memories was the night in 1950 when football and track and field coaching legend Bill McClain took over in mid-season for (football coach) Forest Park as the school’s basketball coach.

“Page didn’t like to lose and he just went off and quit,” McClain told me in an article I did several years ago. “The team wasn’t very good; we won only two games.”

The next year Page went to Florida for a football coaching position and McClain became the head man for the Millers.

But on that night he was to coach the basketball Millers for the first time, at the armory, McClain’s auto was hit by a train on Logan Street at the intersection of Logan and 8th.

Community Health Network named 2016 Most Wired

Technology is improving the efficiency of care delivery and creating a new dynamic in patient interactions, according to results of the 18th Annual Health Care’s Most Wired® survey, released today by the American Hospital Association’s (AHA) Health Forum. For its efforts in using technology to deliver exceptional care in a simple and easy-to-use way, Community Health Network was named among the Most Wired health systems in the nation, according to the survey.

Community is a 16-time recipient of the award and was one of only two Indianapolis healthcare organizations named as Most Wired in 2016.

“These are exciting times in healthcare from a connectivity standpoint as we are embarking into new frontiers to deliver the best possible care to our patients by embracing the latest technological advances,” said Ron Thieme, Ph.D., Community chief knowledge and information officer. “Community has been a healthcare technology pioneer, and we remain committed to improving accessibility to care in the most secure way – meeting our patients where they are to address their healthcare needs.”

According to the survey, Most Wired hospitals are using telehealth to fill gaps in care; provide services 24 hours a day, 7 days a week; and expand access to medical specialists. This year’s results show:

- The top three telehealth services offered in hospitals are consultations and office visits, stroke care, and psychiatric examinations and psychotherapy.
- Stroke care is the most rapid growth area for telehealth services up 38 percent from 2015, as evidence-based studies emphasize the time urgency of stroke care.
- More than 25 percent of hospitals use internet-enabled monitoring devices for chronic disease management of congestive heart failure, diabetes and heart disease.

In redefining the way that they provide care in their communities, Most Wired hospitals are using technology to build patient engagement with the individual’s lifestyle in mind, which includes electronic access to their care team.

- 68 percent accept patient-generated data through the patient portal.
- 26 percent of Most Wired organizations offer E-visits through a mobile application.
- 61 percent use social media to provide support groups.

“Hospitals are breaking-out of their traditional four walls and providing care where and when patients need it,” said Rick Pollack, president and CEO of the AHA. “These Most Wired hospitals exemplify this transformation by harnessing technology, engaging patients and offering services remotely. And, removing policy and other barriers to telehealth will allow even faster adoption of these amazing technologies.”

Most Wired hospitals are utilizing population health management tools and partnering with other health care providers to share critical clinical information used in analyzing interventions aimed at key patient groups, such as those with diabetes. To get patients the right care, hospitals are using predictive modeling to eliminate preventable problems.

- 53 percent interface electronic health record data with population health tools.
- 62 percent stratify patients according to risk.
- 51 percent aggregate data from patient encounters to create a community health record.

The versatility of mobile technologies makes it possible for clinicians and care team members to have the right tools for sound clinical decision-making wherever they are: 81 percent of Most Wired hospitals use mobile applications to notify clinicians of sudden changes in patient conditions and correlated events such as falls or respiratory distress or failure.

As they build out new capabilities, hospitals are also taking strong actions to ensure health data is secure.

- More than 90 percent use intrusion detection systems, privacy audit systems and security incident event management to detect patient privacy breaches, monitor for malicious activities and produce real-time analysis of security alerts.

Adidas Invitational...

Best Choice Fieldhouse seeing the best in basketball

By RICHIE HALL
Reporter Sports Editor

It's been a busy week of basketball in Indianapolis, as the AAU's adidas Invitational has been going pretty much non-stop since Wednesday evening.

One of the game sites is the Best Choice Fieldhouse in Fishers. With six courts available, the Fieldhouse is a logical choice for games, and it has seen plenty of action. There's been quite a few people there, too: Matt Arnold, one of the assistants to the Invitational, said that one Thursday night game had between 400 and 500 spectators watching.

"It was two of the top teams that were playing," said Arnold. "We had people lined up all the way around basically trying to watch one game on Green Court."

Arnold said that on average, about 40 to 50 people are watching each game. Several factors go into that number, such as the teams with younger players bring more spectators than those with older players, and out of state teams usually have fewer people.

"We got some teams from out of state that, they just come with their coach, and he may drive them in on a bus, and they may have one dad with them and maybe a score-keeper," said Arnold.

Alan Carmin, owner of Best Choice Fieldhouse, said that while hosting tournament games is good exposure for the fieldhouse, he also noted that it's a good way to get Fishers and Hamilton County in the spotlight as well.

"We've got 290 teams that come from Canada and all over the country," said Carmin. Not only are the out-of-town players and fans using the fieldhouse, but they're take advantage of the other things the county has to offer - "they stay in hotels, eat in the restaurants," said Carmin.

Overall, the tournament has been going well.

"A lot of teams, a lot of college coaches," said Arnold. "Some pretty good basketball. Everything's been going really good so far."

Arnold said that there were around 200 coaches that pre-registered for the event, and he said they usually expect another 200 to show up at all levels, from NAIA to Division I. Coaches from Indiana, Purdue and Notre Dame have been at the tournament.

"You get them from pretty much all over," said Arnold. He said that at past tournaments, he's found himself sitting in between North Carolina men's basketball coach Roy Williams, and his Duke counterpart Mike Krzyzewski.

Games continue at the fieldhouse today, as well as at Carmel High School, the Noblesville Boys and Girls Club's Community Center, and at Noblesville West Middle School.
