Student questions essential Try a little nature of asking questions

Editor's Note: The Sheridan Student Column is brought to readers by Sheridan High School's 10th grade English class, taught by Abby Williams.

A4

For my column, I was pondering over topics I could write about. I was considering maybe track or psychology during my study hall. While I was thinking of topics I could use to write about, I was simultaneously go-to gather a sense of how to format it.

Then I stumbled upon my teacher's column, in which she was talking about why we as people can never understand what someone's going through. It led me to question why we have to understand and what the purpose is of us feeling the need to know; and to a broader question, why we have to ask questions and why we need the answers for them.

My curiosity in neurotransmitters, as well as the brain itself, helped lead me to research it in a deeper manner. It helped me in my search of understanding my neurodevelopmental disorder, as well as overall helping my curiosity toward understanding the brain. So the question about questions stuck with me, and with the many studies as to why we ask questions, it is a promising thing to write about. Usually, we ask questions to solve something or to better increase the current amount of information we have to help us understand something. a human?" as well as "What galaxy is Earth to lead us into searching to find the answers to the questions we have.

Many neuroscientists, like Marieke Jepma, have done experiments in search of understanding curiosity in humans. According to Psychology Today, Marieke has done experiments that have "used functional magnetic resonance ing through my fellow students' columns imaging (fMRI) to examine the neural underpinnings of curiosity - which parts of the brain are activated when perceptual or epistemic curiosity are induced and relieved."

> In this experiment the researchers found that "the anterior insula and the anterior cingulate cortex" were parts of the brain that gave an "itch"-like feeling when more information was required in order to understand, which in response helped the person obtain more motivation toward getting the answer.

> But in another experiment, done by researchers Min Jeong Kang and Colin Camerer, along with their collaborators, they reviewed another type of curiosity. For their experiment, they used trivia questions to stimulate different parts of the brain, by asking the subjects a series of questions.

> For instance, they asked the participants, "What instrument sounds most like Naturally, our curiosity tends located in?" Psychology Today explains what they did: They "generated epistemic curiosity by asking their subjects trivia questions." Through this experiment the information that Kang and his colleagues took from their data concluded that the experiment "involved epistemic curiosity, on the other hand, the brain areas that were significantly energized (the left caudate and the lateral prefrontal cortex) were those known to be associated with anticipation of reward."

The anticipation of reward can somewhat be explained by dopamine, a neurotransmitter that is known as the reward neurotransmitter. It can give us the motivation to want to learn and understand more, and in doing so get us to ask more questions. With the positive feeling people get after finding the answer to their question, it's no surprise it helps motivate us to ask more questions.

Overall it may be that we get an "itch" and feel the need to know the answer. or we need the information to help us. It could be dopamine, the neurotransmitter which helps us gain the motivation to find the answer. Regardless of the answer, to ask a question is to seek the answers, and we're constantly trying for one to receive the other.

Whether you look at the amazing neuroscientists that did these experiments, or the everyday questions we all have, it's certain that asking questions is part of our nature.

I watched as some gave her "the look." We all know the look that says ... you are not taking care of me the way I want you to take care of me.

She worried that her best was not enough. I looked at her eyes. They told me what she was thinking.

As she approached our table. I said, "There is only one of you. I see that you are doing your best. I see that you are overwhelmed. Take a deep breath. I appreciate how hard you are working to take good care of us."

I saw her sigh. She simply said, "Thank you." At that moment she needed a little kindness.

I watched the young mother in the waiting room of the doctor's office. Her toddler was running round exerting the energy of well, a toddler. Her baby was obviously fussy and not feeling well. She looked tired.

People would look up from their magazines with "the look." It told her she was not measuring up ... so she thought. She tried to calm both her toddler and her baby while she waited. Someone needed to calm her.

I smiled and voiced my thoughts, "This motherhood thing isn't easy. I remember it all too well. It always seemed I was juggling babies and schedules. I dealt with moods and emotions, both theirs and mine.'

I saw her smile. She knew someone recognized and affirmed her feelings. She was tired and overwhelmed. She needed to be shown a little kindness.

I have become more aware of people who just need a helping hand as well as those who need words of comfort. Life is hard. If we take the time to recognize when others are struggling, we can make a difference.

It's just simple acts of kindness. It does not take much effort or many words.

Recently I watched as my grandson, Matthew, walked over to an older gentleman getting out of his car. I recognized this man as someone who often eats at Ginger's Café on Fridays when we are there. I know he suffers from arthritis and struggles to

Zoning board denies controversial barn project

WISH-TV | wishtv.com

A controversial barn project in Hamilton County will not go forward.

The landowner said the barn would be part of his agricultural tech company but some neighbors are staunchly against it.

The Hamilton County Planning Commission gave the project a thumbs up in February. It was then passed to the Board of Zoning Appeals last Wednesday. After a vote, the project was rejected which puts property owner Terry Henderson at square one.

Henderson is the president of Achieva, an agricultural technical company and communications business. He said the barn would be used for training sessions and community events. Henderson did admit private functions like weddings could potentially take place.

Neighbor Ben Cox said the land is not zoned for commercial development. News 8 asked Hamilton County Planning Commissioner Mark Heirbrandt about the property. He said the project fits within the requirements.

"I think this truly comes down to not understanding that this is going to be an agricultural training barn," Henderson said.

"This business is actually a sales and marketing business," Cox said. "It has agricultural clients and that's a big difference.

The barn would have been built just off 276th Street in rural northern Hamilton County. Neighbors displayed their opinion by placing signs of disapproval along the side of the road.

It was one of those icy mornings. Matthew asked if he could walk with him. The parking lot was a bit treacherous. Matthew had him take ahold of his arm as they slowly walked inside. It was snowy and windy and icy. Matthew could have easily dashed from his car to the door. But he didn't.

I was so proud of Matthew. The man smiled and thanked him. He told Matthew he was a fine young man.

I told Matthew I was proud of him. He says, "Grandma, I just try to do the right thing."

That day I was reminded of the importance of just trying.

Actions do speak louder than words, vet words do matter. Perhaps we need to do both. Perhaps we all need to do more of trying to do the right thing.

I do know I have a grandson who will remind me ... both with his actions and his words.

"Going teal" in April with Prevail

The REPORTER

April is Sexual Assault Awareness Month.

"This month is an important time for all of us to recognize that our neighbors and friends have been affected by sexual assault," Prevail, Inc. Executive Director Susan Ferguson told The Reporter. "Did you know that as many as 1 in 5 women in the United States have experienced rape or attempted rape in their lifetime? Sexual Assault Awareness Month is a campaign to raise public awareness about sexual violence and educate communities on how to prevent it. The 2019 campaign theme, 'I Ask,' champions the message that asking for consent is a healthy, normal and necessary part of everyday interactions."

Because the color teal and the teal ribbon have been adopted as symbols of sexual assault awareness and prevention, The Reporter is turning our front page teal in each April print edition in support of our partnership with Prevail Inc.

Just 10 years ago, the autism prevalence rate was 1 in 125 children, and has continued to increase significantly.

I was born and raised right here in Noblesville. I grew up in a home without domestic violence or assault - it wasn't something I saw, or even heard about. But when I was introduced to Prevail of Central Indiana, I was shocked by the number of individuals who are affected by domestic violence. In 2018 alone, Prevail helped more than 4,000 clients in Hamilton County. (Nearly 80 percent of clients are women and children.) Prevail is strictly confidential, and since their core values include integrity and respect, they provide their services at no charge. Domestic violence and abuse are hard topics to discuss, so you don't often hear about them. But at Tom Wood Volkswagen in Noblesville, we're breaking the taboo and raising awareness for Prevail, an organization that helps families in Hamilton County. - Mike Bragg, GM of Tom Wood Volkswagen in Noblesville

Noblesville residents reminded to keep signs out of rights-of-way

The REPORTER

As primary elections approach, the City of Noblesville reminds residents that all temporary and opinion (campaign) signs are prohibited from city right-of-way through the Noblesville Unified Development Ordinance.

To enforce the code, any illegal signs will be collected and there will be a 10 business day window for candidates to reclaim them before they are destroyed.

Noblesville does not restrict the number of opinion signs placed on private property. Areas that should remain sign-free include rights-of-way, medians and vision corner clearance (signs close to the roadway

• Signs are not allowed on city-owned property, nor within the city's right-ofway or on utility poles.

Blackhawks start season by winning two of three

By RICHIE HALL

SHERIDAN - Sheridan scored a 12-2, five-inning victory over Herron in a Wednesday home game.

The Blackhawks scored in each inning. After the Achaeans scored one run in the top of the first, Sheridan poured in five runs in the bottom of the inning. Steve Smith took the first pitch of the game for a triple, then scored right away when Jake O'Hara singled him in.

O'Hara moved to third base after Cameron Hovey hit a double, then both Blackhawks were sent home by Sean Speck's double. Speck moved to third on a passed ball while Jacob Vita was drawing a walk, then Speck scored on another passed ball. Vita would also move around the bases, then stole home to put Sheridan up 5-1.

"We had a good game," said 'Hawks coach Adam Spencer. "Sean Speck played really well, two really nice hits. Kyle Archer came out and pitched very well, threw a lot of strikes. So overall, great team effort, for sure."

Speck was responsible for both of the Blackhawks' second-inning runs, as his double sent Smith (who got on base with his second double of the game) and Hovey home.
